The sun slipped behind the trees. Pip peeped into his mailbag. One little letter was still inside. “One more goodnight,” he whispered.

Over the stepping stones and under the sleepy branches, Pip carried the letter. The stream hummed softly. Who was waiting for this goodnight?

On the hilltop, Pip turned the envelope over. “For Pip,” it said. Inside was a wish: “May your dreams be as kind as you.”

Home at last, Pip hung up his mailbag and tucked the letter beside his bed. His paws were tired. His heart was warm. Goodnight, Pip.

The forest is settling down for the night, but Pip has one last letter to deliver. Join a little fox postman on a gentle journey over stepping stones and beneath sleepy branches, where a small goodnight wish brings a very warm surprise.
